Fontina Aosta D.O.P.

The process is done way up in the mountains, using fresh milk just milked. There is no talk of pasteurisation: the absolute goodness and wholesomeness of the base milk must, in fact, be transferred to the cheese, with the naturalness of all its aromas.

Castelmagno D.O.P.

One of the most noble cheeses in the Italian tradition. Its name appears in historical documents dating as far back as 1277. It is made using the milk from two milkings, the first of which is left to rest overnight in the cold (in the past, and in certain cases even today, the milk is left overnight in a bucket into the cold water from the stream).

Mozzarella Bufala

Mozzarella, in its various forms (plaits, oval-shaped, bite-size pieces, little balls) is fresh, with a white porcelain paste and very thin rind. When it is cut a scented whey of milk ferments oozes out. The taste is full, with a slight musky smell, as a result of the damp environment of the pastures where the buffaloes are put out to graze.
